

MATTHEW TARDUNO

THE BASICS

I am PhD student in Berkeley's Department of Agricultural and Resource Economics. My research interests include climate change and transportation policy.

EDUCATION

| | |
|-----------|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| CURRENT | University of California, Berkeley PhD student in Agricultural and Resource Economics |
| 2012-2016 | Williams College Economics (Highest Honors) and Mathematics Thesis: Consumer Responses to British Columbia's Carbon Tax |

WORK EXPERIENCE

| | |
|-----------|------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| FALL 2018 | University of California, Berkeley Graduate Student Instructor for EEP 100, taught by Calinit Kamala. |
| 2017-2018 | University of California, Berkeley Reader for EEP 100, taught by Ethan Ligon (Fall 2017) and Jeff Perloff (Spring 2018). |
| 2016-2017 | Stanford University Research assistant to health economist Marcella Alsan, whose research focuses on socioeconomic disparities and health outcomes. |
| 2015 | Office of California State Senator Carol Liu Assisted writing comments for environmental impact reports and cost-benefit analyses for highway projects in Californias 25th district. |

SKILLS

| | |
|-------------|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| PROGRAMMING | Proficient in Python, Stata, R, Git, ArcGIS, Html Visit my Github for examples of past projects. |
|-------------|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|